“ My name is Kevin Travis, and I am a blessed man, and the reason is, because I have many fathers in my life. Shane was one of them. He was younger than me, but he was where I wanted to be in life, regarding business, in the way he had personal relationships with the people around him, and, of course, the information that he had that he would use to teach me. Shane was a teacher, as well. When I became an owner-operator fuel hauler, Shane guided me through the entire process: where to go to get the vehicle, who to talk to, and how to determine the best truck for me. Truly a testament to the relationships he had with people. Shane knew everybody, including Ken, at Ryder on Homestead, where I purchased the vehicle. I walked in to Ryder, and I said, "Shane sent me over here to look for a truck." Ken said, "Yeah I know Shane, Let me tell you all about the model we use for fuel Hauling." Then he explained what Shane had already told me. I laughed inside, knowing I made the right choice going to work at S&M Transport. Shane was always there to help me, even when I did not deserve his help. Just like a father does for his own children, Shane did for me, teaching, guiding, and working through issues. I could talk at length, for hours, concerning all the things that Shane has taught me about business, life, relationships, and dealing with difficult situations, and, more importantly, how to repair and resolve them. I will never forget him, or forget the many phone calls that he would make to me, throughout the year, and weeks, just checking up on me to see if I was okay. As I normally do with many people that know me, I always ended the phone call with, "Hey you know I love you right. You know I consider you a father, and I cannot thank you enough for helping me." He would always say, "I know Travis." He and I had a wonderful relationship, and I will never forget him.
